INTRODUCTION

SANDRIDGE

Sandridge, a village about three miles north-east of St. Albans, has managed to retain its identity despite the encroachment of ribbon development from the city and the spread of the Marshalswick estate. It is an ancient settlement, situated on the old Roman road from Verulamium to Royston, and bordering on the wild and lawless Nomansland, which separates the village from Wheathampstead.

The village was not a prosperous one and infant mortality kept the population down to about 800 until the late 19th Century, when the development of the Bernards Heath area of St. Albans almost trebled the numbers living in the parish. This area subsequently became the separate parish of St. Saviour's.

The church of St. Leonard was extensively restored in 1886-7, but there are still remnants of Roman bricks in the chancel masonry and in the chancel arch. The Norman church was consecrated at the turn of the 12th Century. There is a Norman font, and some medieval tiles in the chancel and vestry. The church is set in an attractive part of the village, off the main road. Its lychgate is flanked on one side by the old vicarage, now a Salvation Army home for the elderly, and on the other by one of the village's historic pubs. Unfortunately, much of the churchyard was levelled and cleared of gravestones in the 1960s. The "new" cemetery is a short walk away, with an entrance from House Lane and burials here date from the early 1930s.

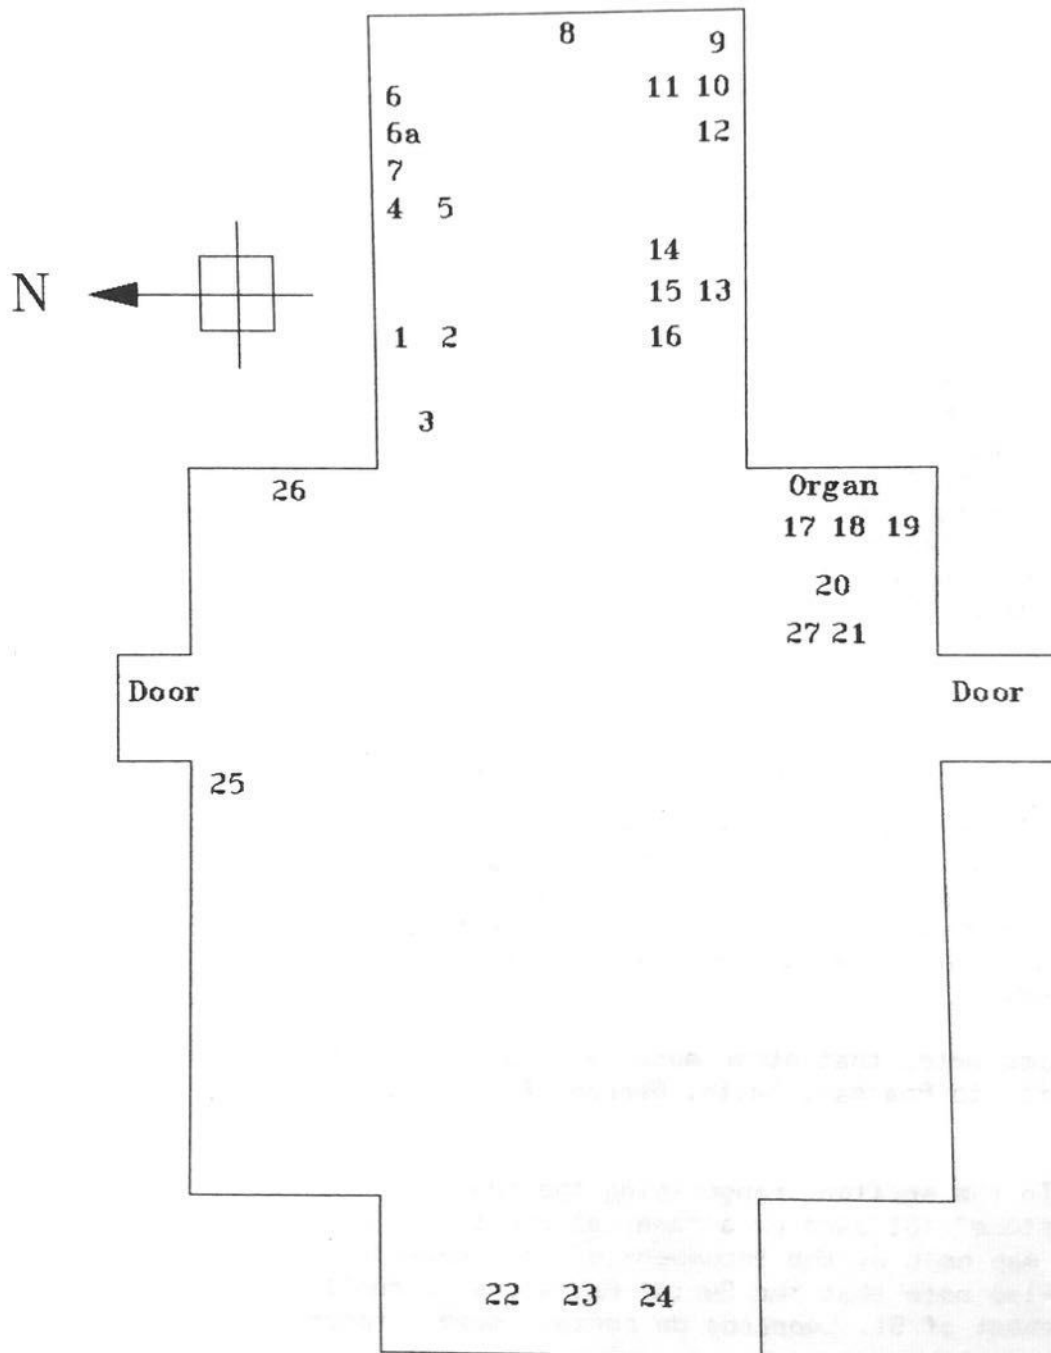

Amongst the memorials of interest are those from the Thrale and Cox families, the two foremost families in the parish since the 16th Century. The Cox chest tomb, which is literally covered with inscriptions, is under the trees to the left past the lychgate. A chest-tomb marking the entrance to the Thrale vault can be found on the right through the lychgate. The Thrales have been the subject of substantial research in their own right over the years. When Cussans visited the churchyard in the mid-19th Century he noted 22 memorials to the Thrale family to the south and south-west of the church tower, extending over a period of 150 years but, unfortunately, the great majority of these have since disappeared.

Cussans also noted that other memorials in the churchyard at that time were chiefly to Pearman, Smith, George, Baldock and Patmore.

Notes:

1. In the section transcribing the New Churchyard, notations such as "No stone" followed by a name represent entries found in the Burial List map held by the Incumbent of St. Leonards.
2. Also note that the Burial Registers currently held by the Incumbent of St. Leonards do contain some references to the kinship of those buried.
3. The transcription was completed as at 13th June 1989.
4. The transcribed stones have not been reported here in their entirety in order to save space but a full transcription can be seen at the Hertfordshire Record Office, Hertford, St. Leonards Church, Sandridge, or from a copy held by the Society.

HERTFORDSHIRE FAMILY AND POPULATION HISTORY SOCIETY

The above Society was founded in 1977 and has already played an important role in local history research in the County. Holding regular meetings in different parts of Hertfordshire, the Society tries to strike a balance between talks for the experienced family researcher and sessions for complete beginners who require help.

A journal is sent to members three times a year entitled "Hertfordshire People", which, besides articles and items of information, gives details of who is working on which names in County towns and villages. A catalogue of member's interests has been published which is updated regularly in "Hertfordshire People". Journals from other family history societies all over the world are received on a reciprocal basis so that there is an ever growing library available to members.

The Society has copies of the Genealogical Index (IGI) on microfiche from the Church of Latter Day Saints for all the country. Recognised as one of the most valuable tools for the family history researcher, it has been the stepping stone for many people just starting out on creating their family tree.

Further information on the Society's activities can be obtained by writing to The Secretary, 6 The Crest, Ware, Herts.
